The Madeleine. The building of this fine church was begun in 1764, and Napoleon I. intended it for a Temple of Glory, but it was afterwards dedicated as the Church of St. Mary Magdalen, and finished in 1842. It is built in the style of a Roman Temple, and is 354 feet long, 141 feet wide, and 100 feet high. The relief in the façade above the Corinthian columns represents "The Last Day of Judgment," and the bronze entrance doors illustrate the Ten Commandments. The interior contains many fine sculptures, frescoes, and paintings.
